Thai PM Orders Study on "Vaccine Passports" To Boost Tourism

The Southeast Asian nation has been mulling the idea of so-called "vaccine passports", but no target date has beenset and tourism operators have complained about lost revenue.

Thailand's prime minister said on Tuesday he has commissioned a study to look into issuing COVID-19 vaccination certificates for international travellers, as the country seeks to revive a tourism industry battered by coronavirus curbs.

The Southeast Asian nation has been mulling the idea of so-called "vaccine passports", but no target date has been set and tourism operators have complained about lost revenue.

Prime Minister Prayuth Chan-ocha said Thailand will proceed with caution, waiting to see how effective vaccines are first in preventing the spread of Covid-19.

"I have already ordered the study so we can be prepared, but it's also important that we proceed in line with other countries," Prayuth said in a post on Facebook on Tuesday.

People in Thailand who are vaccinated would be given certificates, which could be used for international travel, he said.

Thai authorities will meet next week to discuss procedures to obtain such certificates, as well as quarantine arrangements for tourists with "vaccine passports" entering Thailand.

Previously, officials have said vaccinated visitors could have mandatory quarantine cut from two weeks to three days or waived entirely.

The global vaccine rollout has given hope to the pandemic-hit tourism industry, which makes up about 11% of SoutheastAsia's second-largest economy.

In 2020, Thailand's tourism revenue slumped to 332 billion baht ($10.94 billion) from 1.91 trillion baht a year earlier, as visitor numbers plunged by 83%.

Coronavirus (COVID-19) NTP Team and Work Guidelines

As the enterprise is experiencing challenges in acquiring new clients, renegotiating existing contracts, and no revenues, all this has put pressure on cash flows forcing enterprises to re-engineer business models to reduce costs by making its team, work from home and distant locations (Hometown) in order to ensure the work of marketing, PR activity, Business association with the new and existing clients with the COVID protocol. NTP has resolved to limit the visit and function from the office and reduce the expense of facilities in the given circumstances until 31 March 2021.

 With this model of work, we are able to sustain the setup and attrition levels with reduced expenses & ensuring talent retention with domain knowledge preservation.

“Our primary concern is the health and safety of our employees and us. We are taking precautionary measures to reduce their risk of exposure,” the company said in a statement shared with all our clients and Business Associates.

Policy brief & purpose

This company policy includes the measures we are actively taking to mitigate the spread of coronavirus. It's important that we all respond responsibly and transparently to these health precautions as along with Client and Desk communications during duty hours of 10 am to 07 pm.

Tourism involves patients traveling from their home country to a foreign country, where they must make arrangements for their treatment and stay. When seeking care in a foreign country, patients use various agents including insurance companies and healthcare providers One of these agencies is the Tourism

Facilitator. FACILITATORS provide a combination of arrangements required for medical tourism and act as intermediaries between patients and medical services. They have a presence in the host country, the destination country, or a third country. They enable foreign patients to locate a suitable destination within their budget. Tour Facilitator companies advertise and reach a larger audience through the medium of the internet. They have emerged as the most common source of information that influences a patient's choice of the destination country. Today, facilitators, are an indispensable component of the tourism industry, as they connect hospitals and physicians to patients across the world. They are networking tools that provide particular hospitals or physicians with a much wider platform and can promote them across the globe

Emerging ethical issues

>The internet allows unqualified personnel easy entry into the health services trade. In the absence of a conventional doctor-patient relationship in which doctors are governed by a code of conduct, services provided by intermediaries such as tour facilitators which might involve non-medical personnel needs ethical guidelines and regulation.

>The fact that these facilitators continue to grow in the number indicates their demand in the market. Facilitators do not provide direct access to services, but they have different strategies to attract consumers in the form of packaged tours with attractive prices, and variety in services, which can influence the decision-making process.

> Patients may be attracted by price comparisons and perceived quality of care. However, important issues such as confidentiality of information, aftercare and patient's rights are not prominently discussed on these sites. Privacy and data protection are important subjects when technology allows information to be easily stored, retrieved, accessed, and exchanged.

Recommendations

The four basic principles for evaluating e-health information are; self-regulation, evaluation of information, regulation, and awareness of users & following the emerging trend of Telemedicine and Robotics and a new era of emerging technology. These can be the pillars of a regulatory framework.
